

Written language vs spoken language

Here is an example of the same idea written in a formal style, and in a less formal style as a spoken text.

Read the two texts and see if you can note any differences in the table below:

Written text	Spoken text
In general, the Green and White Papers successfully highlight the government's well-placed concern for equity towards the unemployed, and propose practical recommendations which are likely to lessen the problem of mass unemployment such as the training wage.	So, generally speaking, the Green and White Papers are successful because they show that the government cares about equity towards the unemployed. Also, they've come up with recommendations that are practical — what I mean by this is that their recommendations are likely to help without the problem of mass unemployment. For example, they recommended the training wage, which is a good way of trying to deal with the problem of unemployment.

Written text

Spoken text

The following image and table highlights some of the differences:

Written text	Spoken text
In general, the Green and White Papers successfully highlight the government's well-placed concern for equity towards the unemployed, and propose practical recommendations which are likely to lessen the problem of mass unemployment such as the training wage.	So, generally speaking, the Green and White Papers are successful because they show that the government cares about equity towards the unemployed. Also, they've come up with recommendations that are practical — what I mean by this is that their recommendations are likely to help without the problem of mass unemployment. For example, they recommended the training wage, which is a good way of trying to deal with the problem of unemployment.

Annotations:

- Sentence connectors: Points to "So, generally speaking" and "Also" in the spoken text.
- Formal vs informal vocabulary: Points to "highlight", "concern", and "propose" in the written text.
- Repetition: Points to "recommendations" and "recommendations" in the spoken text.
- First-person: Points to "I" in the spoken text.

Written text

- Shorter
- 1 long sentence
- Formal language e.g. 'highlight'; 'concern'
- Written in the third person only (e.g. 'It, they')

Spoken text

- Longer
- 3 shorter sentences
- Less formal language e.g. 'show'; 'cares about'
- Uses the first person occasionally (e.g. 'I, me, we')
- Uses more sentence connectors
- Uses repetition to aid understanding

Summary

- Spoken text is more informal and longer than written text, and uses more words and more sentences.
- Spoken sentences also tend to be shorter than those found in essays.
- The first person (I, me, we, etc.) is more acceptable in speech than in most academic writing, and signposting words like 'also', 'next', and 'for example' are used more often than in written work.
- Some level of informality is acceptable, although judge carefully and don't use slang, rude words, or words unfamiliar to your audience.
- Take care to explain any unusual or new words, and provide a visual of the spelling or meaning of any unfamiliar words and phrases.

Adapted from Inglis, M. (2007). Unistep. Academic skills guide (4th ed.). Sydney, Australia.

© Western Sydney University 2016-2021, unless stated otherwise.
 Study Smart Website & PDF Guides by Library Academic Literacies
 Team 2016-2021 (see below) is licensed under CC BY 4.0

Kim Heckenberg (Manager)	Katrina Trewin
Linda Parker (Manager)	Claire Urbach
Tahlia Birnbaum	Anna Wallace
Tae McKnight	Fiona Webber
Beverley Miles	Lisa Worthington
Sara Perley	